In Memorium: Professor Louis Flam

(Lehman Today, Spring 2016)

Associate Professor of Anthropology Louis Flam passed away on February 18, 2016 from diabetes-related complications. He was 71-years-old. Flam joined Lehman College in 1992 and made a significant impact on the lives of both students and colleagues.

An outstanding educator, he won the Lehman Excellence in Teaching Award ("Teacher of the Year") in 2004. Alongside his work and research at the College, Flam carried out archaeological excavations in rural and remote regions of Pakistan.

Flam was a native of Clifton, New Jersey. He earned a B.A. in Fine Arts at Rutgers University in 1967, and in 1981, his Ph.D in South Asian Archaeology from the University of Pennsylvania. From 1982 through 1988, he served as Director of the Archaeological and Anthropological Research Center, Institute of Sindhology, University of Sindh in Pakistan.

Flam began directing the Sindh Archaeological Project in 1975 when he was a graduate student at the University of Pennsylvania and continued his work in the field until 2010. The majority of his manuscripts and publications concerned his research on the Harappan Civilization in the Sindh Province, including his dissertation The Paleogeography and Prehistoric Settlement Patterns in Sindh, Pakistan (ca. 4000-2000). Aside from a large settlement survey of this area, Flam worked to detect changes between the modern flow of the Indus River and the ancient river course. His team was the first to document the presence of the now extinct Nara Nadi river course, which had a role in ancient settlement when it first came into being in the third millennium BC. Flam also uncovered extensive irrigation systems produced by the Indus Civilization in the areas of Kohistan and Kirthar. Changes in the river over time, documented by Flam and his team, provided important evidence for changes in settlement patterns.

Flam worked at a number of other archaeological sites during his four decade career, including: Seistan, Afghanistan; Salmon Ruins, New Mexico; the Eleanor Site (ENMU 883), Chaco Canyon, New Mexico; Ban Chiang, Thailand; and on islands off the coast of Kuwait. He spent many years excavating at the site of Ghazi Shah, located in the Dadu District of Pakistan, investigating both earlier components of the Amrian Phase and later ones of the Indus Valley Civilization. Flam had an abiding love for the people and culture of Pakistan that lives on in his work.

During his career, Flam was funded by a range of organizations and institutions, including the National Science Foundation, the Smithsonian Institution, the Ford Foundation, the University of Pennsylvania, and the Leakey Foundation. He also received a Fulbright-Hays Pre-doctoral Research Fellowship and four Fulbright Research Grants.

Prior to joining the Lehman staff, Flam taught briefly at Rutgers University and Union College. Much beloved by his students at the College, his most popular courses were Ancient Peoples and Cultures, Excavation at the Lehman College Site, and Peoples and Cultures of Pakistan, Afghanistan, and India.

Unbeknownst to most who knew him, Flam had been battling diabetes since childhood. Despite the many hardships brought on by the illness, he never complained and continued to teach at Lehman until the week before his death. "Louis was so loved by his students and colleagues," said Victoria Sanford, chair of the anthropology department. "He was generous, courageous, and humble about his many accomplishments. He will be missed by all who knew him."
